THE PACIFIC Commercial Advertiser.

(For the P. C. Advertiser.)
Night Pictures.

When day hath dropped behind the world,
And twilight's azure curtains hang around,
All fringed with dew; then doth the busy night
Wave web-dreams round the tendrils of my heart,
All quivering with love for night, and moon,
And waives of violet, with murmuring sounds,
Lulling on summer-midnight shores, pearl-paved
And starlight-poled, till tangled there,
Amid the silken meshes of my dream,
I hold these fragments captive.

Now balmy dews,
Closing the drowsy lids of lingering day,
That hush the world at the verge of dusk,
Imprint bright stars in kisses on her eyes,
So holding them in sleep.

Amid the clouded cloisters of the East,
The stars of vapors tremble silently,
And through the hushed hours of breathless night,
The positive moon-moon, with pallid brow,
Doth wander like a man, cloud-hooded, while
She tells her star-headed story for her round,
And sweeps dew-tears in yance for the world.

You see
I am o'er fond of little winged stars,
And muffled notes, that float above the sky
Through silver ripples. For I ever loved
To lie, 'mid pensive airs, with half-shut eyes,
And see the moon careering through the deep
Mysterious sky, borne on by gentle gales,
Hair, hiding in their breath for fear of ill.
On, on, she speeds, till at the morning blooms,
And heaps her rosy splendors in the sky,
She wrecks amid the glories of the day.

Against the clinging pulses of the world,
With kind affection and in gentle deed,
The twilight with her fair brown cheeks,
All dimpled with star gleams.

Then near our car,
While night comes hovering o'er us like a bird,
Shaking the darkness from her jetty plumes,
So through hushed watches to the dawn she sits,
Wing-folding in the darkness.

The stars were lost in cloud, and the sad moon
In wild delirium did seek to hide
Her brow within the mist, and showed her woe
At the end of these, her favored ones.
Then in the strangeness of her great distress,
She sought to thrust herself upon a cloud,
And wreck her as any helpless ship
Would strand upon a misty hidden shoal.

So went she seeking for her damp sea grave,
As men were seeking in the fringed East,
And busy snobs buried her from view.
Yet once again:
I saw the night in weeds, and garb of woe,
With all her wealth of dewy locks unbound.
The jeweled moon, upon her mournful brow,
And 'mid her flowing tresses, glowy black,
The stars entwined in tangled lace; lay,
Dead pearls amid her hair.

At last, the feverish moon,
Moistening her lips upon the sea's damp verge,
Grew wondrous radiant, and at light of bloom
Poured all her silver o'er the waves, and fell
Into the night beyond.

Let from the laboring womb of cloud-black night,
'Mid pallid shadows and misty mists,
Creep hither, hither, hither, hither, hither,
That all your struggles cannot, voices, hold!
In there a lifting of blank, dead, life,
From eyes long held in blindness, now open
To the fearful splendors of new life!
(Alas! poor woe, ye cannot give to me
A living tongue to explain my thoughts.)
This is the birth of new life—the day—
This is the birth of new life—the day—
Honolulu, Oct. 1, 1864. C. W. S.

VARIETY.

Punch has the following motto for Semmes' presentation award:
"A fitting gift to one whose merits lay
In being always prompt to cut away."

To PREVENT CATTLE FROM JUMPING FENCES.—Simply clip the eyelashes of the upper lid with a scissor, and the ability or disposition to jump is as effectually destroyed as Semmes' power was by the loss of his locks. The animal will not attempt to jump a fence until the eyelashes are grown again.

There is nothing better for seeds than soap-suds, both before and after planting. The seeds should be saved from the washing, and used as needed. Besides answering the place of water and manure, there is something about it which keeps the ground from cracking, and renders it moist and loose.

At a late printers' festival the editorial vocation was thus "done brown." "That man is expected to know everything, tell all he knows, and guess at the rest; to make known his character; establish the reputation of his neighbors; and elect all candidates for office; to blow up everything and reform the world; to live for the benefit of others, and the epitaph on his tombstone—'Here he lies at last; in short, he is a locomotive running on the track of public notoriety; his lever is his pen; his boiler is filled with ink; his tender his scissiors; his driving wheels public opinion; whenever he explodes it is caused by the non-payment of subscriptions.'"

The FURRY—Grace Greenwood, in her late lecture in Chicago, drew the following picture in the future:
Back on these troublous times will our children look with deference and awe. The sons of our brave soldiers will date their patents of nobility on grander battle-fields than Agincourt or Bannockburn. Such patents of nobility as no royal herald's office has symbols sufficiently glorious for. Many a coat of arms in those days will have one sleeve hanging empty.

We may picture to ourselves a group of noble young ladies, some ten years hence, thus promptly accounting for their orphanage—an orphanage which the country should see to it, shall not be desolate. Says one, "My father fell in beating back the invaders at Gettysburg."

Says another, "My father fell on Lookout Mountain, fighting above the clouds."
Says a third, "My father suffered martyrdom in Liberty Prison."
Says another, "My father went down in the Cumberland."

Yet another, "My father was rocked into the long sleep below the waves, in the cradle of the Monitor." And there will be hapless little hearts, "Alas we have no part or lot in such glories—Our fathers were Rebels!" And here and there a youth more unfortunate, who will steal away from his comrades and murmur in bitterness of soul, "Alas, God help me! My father was a Copperhead!"
